ABOUT THE CUNY SCHOOL OF PROFESSIONAL STUDIES

Since its founding in 2003, the CUNY School of Professional Studies (SPS) has grown from offering one small certificate program to offering seven bachelor’s degrees, six master’s degrees, and 27 certificate programs to over 2,000 students. The first and still only school in CUNY where students can complete a fully online bachelor’s degree, SPS also serves thousands of members of the City’s workforce through partnerships with such agencies as the New York City Department of Education, the New York City Human Resources Administration, and the New York City Office of Emergency Management.

Our innovative programs are designed for the needs of our students and an evolving workplace. We provide instruction and perspectives not offered elsewhere, and we are proud to have earned a reputation for academic excellence. Our faculty are leading experts from throughout the CUNY system and professionals in a range of fields, and our programs prepare students for further studies and professional advancement. Our students, as diverse as the City itself, are always our highest priority.

The City University of New York, the nation’s largest urban public university, dates back to 1847 with the founding of the Free Academy by Townsend Harris. The mission of that institution, as he put it, was to “Open the doors to all – let the children of the rich and poor take seats together and know of no distinction save that of industry, good conduct and intellect.” Today, CUNY continues to provide an open door to educational opportunity and quality programs for all New Yorkers.

KEYNOTE SPEAKER: TANYA FIELDS

Tanya Fields founded the BLK ProjeK in 2009 to help single working mothers like herself rise out of poverty and sustain their families. Prior to establishing the BLK ProjeK, Ms. Fields worked with such environmental organizations as Sustainable South Bronx and Mothers on the Move. A Baruch College alumna who majored in Political Science, Ms. Fields has drawn on both her education and her experience to become a prominent blogger and public speaker on matters of environmental and social justice. She served on the plenary panel for the 2011 conference of the Northeast Sustainable Agriculture Working Group, gave a keynote at the 2012 Just Food conference, and recently created and hosted Not Just Talk: Food in the South Bronx, a one-day conference centered on issues of food justice.

Ms. Fields currently writes a twice-monthly column on food and food justice for EBONY.com and is profiled in the book The Next Eco-Warriors: 22 Young Women and Men Who Are Saving the Planet.

The wearing of caps and gowns in academic ceremonies is a long held tradition dating back to the medieval beginnings of the university system. In that era, heavy woolen robes were de rigueur, though this was due more to a lack of heat in the halls of academia than to a passing trend in fashion.

Contemporary fabric blends may be replacing the traditional woolen robe, but the signature colors and styling for this regalia remain steadfast against the passing of time.

Gowns for those who have earned a doctorate degree tend to be quite elaborate, featuring wide bell sleeves and velvet panels running down the front and across the sleeves. These gowns, which at one point in American history were universally black, are generally connected by their color to the degree-granting school of the graduate. Master’s level gowns are characterized by their long squared-off sleeves, while bachelor’s gowns are identifiable by their clean lines and long-pointed sleeves.

The hood worn by academics reveals additional insight into the education of the wearer. The inside of each hood is lined in the colors of the graduate’s alma mater, while the border around the hood generally indicates the degree subject of the graduate. Hoods are worn draped around the throat and over the shoulders, so that the identifying colors can be easily spotted under the chin.
